Dear WTA, On the VGP calendar page, you mention Valley Youth House as offering a group for emotionally troubled GLBT youth. Can you tell me about that? Signed, Having Issues

Dear Having Issues, In the last few months, PA-Diversity's Infoline Committee has been trying to bring all resources and references up to date. Committee Chair Robert Roush sent a form seeking the latest information to every group PDN lists on its website (www.padiversity.org), and on VGP's calendar page.

Unfortunately, the form to Valley Youth House's GLBT youth group came back from VYH with a handwritten note on it saying, "NO LONGER IN-SERVICE -- PLEASE DELETE." There was no other information. Since all other agencies returning information included more extensive responses, Robert made a further effort to reach VYH.

David Gilgoff, the Executive Director of Valley Youth House, returned an email to PA Diversity Network saying that, "Due to lack of interest we are no longer offering the GLBT group." He added that "If there is a service falling within the scope of our mission and practice that would be helpful for GLBT youth we would be glad to consider it."

Although VYH offers general services for troubled youth, Valley Youth House does not offer any GLBT youth services. Though, according to Mr. Gilgoff, "GLBT youth are always welcome for services at Valley Youth House." As per the request of the agency, Valley Youth House has been deleted from VGP's Calendar Page and the PDN Resource List.

But, that doesn't mean that there is no support for you. If you are looking for a generally supportive group for GLBT Youth, try Haven (see page 3 for details). Some of the local High Schools also have GSAs. If you need help with emotional problems, try calling the GLBT Infoline (M-F 6pm to 9pm) for a referral to a program or counselor that could help you.

RAGS TO RICHES TAKE THE FIRST STEP

by Denise McKelvey

THE HUBBUB OF SOCIAL SECURITY

On national television I am being told by George W. "If you were born before 1950 or currently getting a check, nothing will change." Therefore, individuals born before 1950 should have no fear. George W. has it under control. Sunday, February 27 on 'Face The Nation' they told me that by the end of 2005, there would be a 50/50 chance that there will be any reform solution. Precise details are a long way off. We can worry all we want, but at this point there are only proposals. Mass journalism, which is America's leading retailer of any economic/financial issue, has declared war on any reform of the Social Security system that involves private investment accounts. First, the system is not currently in crisis, however, by 2042 the Social Security trust fund will decrease to zero, unless changes are made.

What may pass for younger workers is the "choice" to participate in investing a portion of their Social Security payroll taxes in private accounts. This portion of the account will include an opportunity to identify a beneficiary for liquidation upon your death. For non-married individuals, this would be an advantage, as well as, an ability to control a portion of your future assets.

Financial options may include multi asset class funds that tailor the investment mix to the participant's age and circumstances. Investors who are not particularly savvy in investing may choose "Lifestyle" or "Target" funds that adjust their mix of stocks and bonds gradually to become more conservative as we age. These could very well be passively managed funds with low operating expenses of .3% per year. Another proposal is to raise the cap on incomes contributing to the Social Security system. This option will allow more money into the government system today, but will not solve the future problem. If they raise the Social Security tax rate from 12.4 percent of wages to 15.9 percent immediately, the whole problem goes away. Do you want the government managing more of your money? The present system guarantees nothing but its own insolvency. Change is needed, however out of our control. What we can control, is taking stock in our own personal futures. Begin today by reducing your reliance on government control and creating your own financial future.

Unless the US government is willing to offer some education to the American public, there will continue to be anxiety over managing their future. The Social Security reform naysayers equate investing with gambling, and believe more in government than in Americans. Any system which encourages work, thrift and personal responsibility is preferred to reliance on any government annuity system which the individual doesn't own, and whose equity dies with them.

MUHLENBERG THEATER

Muhlenberg Theatre Association presents Lures and Snare April 1- 10, 2005 in the Studio TheatreTrexler Pavilion for Theatre & Dance, Muhlenberg College. Information & Tickets 484-664-3333. Web www.muhlenberg.edu/cultural/baker The Muhlenberg Theatre Association stage production of LURES AND SNARES is an original musical adaptation of several stories introduced by American melodramas at the turn of the last century. Lures and Snare is about the dreams and values of America * both then and now. Drawing upon Dion Boucicault's masterpiece The Poor of New York and Augustin Daly's Under The Gaslight, director Dr. Beth Schachter and co-writer Troy Dwyer have adapted and rewritten these texts in collaboration with composer Mike Krisukas (Zen for Primates) to create the new musical, Lures and Snare. This adventurous musical challenges audiences to ask "what if" those simple dualities of good and evil are complicated by contemporary psychological and economic realities. Performances are Tuesdays through Saturdays at 8 p.m. and Sundays at 2 p.m.

RANTS & RAVES BY STEPHEN T. LIBBY

Dear Diary, As you know, I recently enjoyed my eighth month of sobriety. Liz and Trish asked me to write about my experience. It was mid July '04 when I put down the Sky Blues and Camel Lights (Colin Farrell's favorite brand. What do you mean obsessed?) And, I haven't looked back. Well, perhaps the occasional glance in the rearview to compare where I am now to where I was then.

99.999% of the time I don't miss it. You have no idea how much time is taken up by drinking, recovering from said drinking and then planning to drink all over again. "Let's go out for a few drinks to plan where we are going to go out for a few drinks this weekend." Clever! It takes a lot of energy to be that dysfunctional.

For those of you who have seen Avenue Q, while drinking, my constant companions were The Bad Ideas Bears. For those of you who have not seen Avenue Q, go see it, as soon as you're done reading this article. I was a celebratory drinker. I liked to party. I rarely, if ever, drank alone. The usual suspects were birthdays, holidays and special occasions, like Thursdays. Now who can I blame for this addiction? Who to blame? Who to blame?

Ah, my mother. The one responsible for the bulk of my psychological upheaval. Just kidding. My mother was a true angel. An angel with a drinking problem that she inherited from her mother and so on. My mother could drink most lobsters under the table. I'm from Maine. For the PA translation replace lobsters with coalminers. Pretty impressive now, huh? Drinking and smoking (more on that later- I said more-on) were glorified not only in my family but throughout late 60's and 70's culture (or so I've heard). Samantha Stevens (Bewitched) always met Darrin at the door with his martini. Most TV and movie characters turned to the bottle to celebrate, drown their sorrows or relieve stress. That may explain my affection for old game shows like Match Game where the B-list celebs were allowed to drink and smoke while taping the show. They would tape a week's worth in one day. That explains why Charles Nelson Reilly and Brett Somers always seemed half crocked on Friday's show. They WERE half crocked.

If you're still reading, this column is not meant to lecture (they don't pay me enough), or to judge (God gets paid for that). I am not calling anyone out (you know who you are) and I am not bitter (everyone can just screw off because I can't drink). This is merely a cautionary tale about someone who was tired of hangovers, smelling like alcohol and the wasting of too many beautiful days. It is also meant to empower others who feel they have a problem, to stop.

The only thing I'm going to say about cigarette use is most people don't look as cool as Colin Farrell (again, this is not an obsession) or Angelina Jolie when they smoke. It is killing you and others. So do yourself a favor and speed up the process. Light up while walking in front of a bus. And again, I am NOT bitter.

What I am is grateful, to so many of my friends and family who have been so very supportive. I used to drink with them all. We still go out. They still drink. I don't. We still have fun. I love them dearly. And have possibly extended my time with them by not giving in to my addictions. Except chocolate. Good luck with your addictions. Keep the ones that won't kill you. Smooches, Steve

You Get a Free Dessert with that Baby

The old images of politicians kissing babies aren't far off from reality. Everyone loves babies. Whenever we go out anywhere, quite a few strangers come up and say hi to our son. They strike up some small talk, saying things like, "He's so beautiful," or "He has your eyes," or "His mother must be so proud," or "Which one of you is his father?" Lucas loves the attention and we don't mind it either. We are very proud of our son and very proud of our roles as dual dads. We are extra proud to be gay parents and thus we answer all questions honestly, when we choose to answer them at all.

Answering the "Which one of you is his father??" question has become quite interesting for us. We answer the question honestly. We always imagine it's obvious we both have important roles in our baby's life by our interaction with him, and what those roles are should be quite obvious by our interactions with each other. But let's face it, there aren't so many out gay male parents around, so not everybody immediately gets it. So, they ask us. And we tell them. And then...they congratulate us. It's always like that, no one faints, no one chokes, and no one has a stroke. Somehow it's anti-climactic but still very nice.

Some of our pleasantly memorable moments after we "out" ourselves as gay male parents occur in restaurants. At a local Italian restaurant our hostess continually wished us luck with our son. When Lucas was a few months old, the waitresses at TGI Fridays all took turns holding him so we could eat our dinner as they proceeded to share with us all sorts of advice and experience. At Bennigan's we were each given dessert on the house as congratulations from the manager on being parents.

It pays to be honest. We can be proud, our son will be proud, and the world gets to see who we are. But most importantly we may get to enjoy another White Chocolate Oreo Cream Triple Layer ultra decadent dessert again...for free.

SCOTT SAYS

By Scott Laubner

While regular columnist Scott Laubner works on a hot spring fever column for May, he welcomes this month's guest columnist. Recently, former PA Diversity GLBT Infoline Chair, Robert Roush took a job at Geisinger Medical System, headquartered in Danville PA. This is an occasional series on "Gay Life in the Backwoods."

...Being here in Danville is pretty depressing GLBT-wise. Of course I'm totally out at my office with my partner's pictures on my desk, and I talk about doing "this and that" with my partner Steve. Some people get it, others are a bit confused, but they'll all get it before too long. There are just no "out" people around! I met one guy who works on the hospital campus. He was so closeted, he kept referring to his gayness as his "private life" and no one had any business looking at his "private life." Finally I exploded and said- "Look, I interviewed with about 16 different people, and while chatting EVERY ONE OF THEM mentioned their husband or wife. How is it that it's our private life, but it's not private for straight people!?" Needless to say, he had no answer, and needless to say, he's not going to work out as my first gay friend here.

Sigh. I really did try to listen and understand this guy. He was divorced and had 2 children- two boys that he has full-custody of. He was telling me that he mostly can't meet anyone, and that he has had to stay in Danville for the last 18 years to raise his boys. He wanted to go to school to pursue his dream to be (sorry for the following stereotype, but hey, we ARE good at it) an interior designer. I thought, "Hey, how admirable." And felt horrible for getting so upset.

Later on, I realized that his remaining closeted really didn't help his sons grow. He had decided to keep his true self from his sons. He had decided he could never have a partner, depriving his sons of the richness that another soul brings to a relationship- and to a family. If he had made the decision early on to pursue his education and move to Philadelphia, he would have broadened his sons' experiences.

In the end, I wondered and still fret over the injustice and the disservice that remaining closeted brings to everyone. If no one knows you're gay, how can that show people we are decent hard working, fun, intelligent, wonderful people? And, how can we expect to be treated equally? From the Sticks, Robert PS: Robert is still on the Infoline Committee & PDN Board. (ed.)

PA-DIVERSITY UPDATES

PDN volunteers Liz Bradbury and Patricia Sullivan attended a special training of trainers presented by GLSEN in New York, in March. The workshop focused on training people to effectively deal with GLBT youth issues and concerns. PA Diversity Network will be offering training for professionals who need to know more about dealing with GLBT youth, later this year.

The Greater Lehigh Valley GLBT Infoline, which is part of PDN, continues to offer a phone line to trained volunteers, Monday through Friday, 6pm to 9pm. Hours will be expanding by the end of the month. Those interested in training as Infoline phone answerers may contact the Infoline Committee through the PA Diversity Network web site or by calling 610-4342-5449 or emailing liztrish@aol.com. The next training will be in May and will be conducted by Sarah Kersh of the Crime Victims Council.

Valley Gay Press, which is also part of PDN, is read by nearly 2000 GLBTA people a month. VGP seeks a volunteer to help post VGP web site information. Contact PDN to volunteer.

LIZ OUT LOUD 7 JUST DO IT

By Liz Bradbury

What if you were Terry Schiavo? Would you want to live that way? For this moment, don't think about it as though it was anyone other than yourself. That's what it's really about, would you want to be kept alive by a feeding tube pushed down your throat, when you had no brain function at all and would never recover?

If you are like most people in this country, you're saying, "No, I wouldn't want to be kept alive like that. I wouldn't want to be an emotional or financial burden on my family. I wouldn't want to spend 15 years in a hospital bed, in a vegetative state doing nothing more than breathing." Are you thinking that? Well, what are you doing about it?

Terry Schiavo never made a living will to make her wishes known. Do you have a Living Will? Do you have the legal papers to ensure nobody keeps you alive for 15 years in a hospital bed on a machine if you are, say, severely injured in a car accident? Terry Schiavo had a heart attack. She was young when it happened, 38 years old. She probably thought this could never happen to her, so she didn't plan ahead.

Gay men and lesbians are even more at risk than someone like Terry Schiavo, who could be legally married. We can't be sure that our closest loved ones, our same-sex partners, will be able to make medical decisions for us unless we have arranged medical powers of attorneys. If you don't have one, then if anything happens to you, the decisions will be made by your parents. If your parents aren't alive, then decisions about your future life, death, and finances will be made by your brothers and sisters. Even if you haven't spoken to your brothers and sisters for years, they will be the ones to make the legal decisions about you. Each will have an equal voice in your care. How do you feel about that? It's the law, unless you have the right legal papers.

You need a "Living Will," that outlines your medical and end-of-life wishes to be sure that your directions are followed. You need a will to be sure your assets are fairly divided among the people you love. You need a "Power of Attorney" to be sure your finances are taken care of by the right people, and you need a "Medical Power of Attorney" to be sure the right decisions about your medical care are made by the right people. If you have kids, you need legal parenting agreements. Get these papers. If you need a pro-GLBT lawyer referral call the GLBT Infoline M-F 6 to 9pm at 610-HELP-123 (610-435-7123).

PA Diversity Network will be presenting at the Unitarian Universalist Interweave Conference on May 7. The topic of the presentation will be "Legal Papers You Need to Protect Yourself and Your Same-Sex Partner." I will be doing the presentation with Patricia Sullivan. To attend that presentation, contact Allyson Hamm at UUCLV's Interweave. If your organization would like to host a presentation on the topic of legal steps same-sex partners should take, please contact me at Pennsylvania Diversity Network for more information at: 610-432-5449, liztrish@aol.com or info@padiversity.org

TRISH'S COLUMN

By Patricia Sullivan

WHO'S JTROS?

ERA Real Estate sent us a card to thank us for doing business with them. It was addressed to "Elizabeth Bradbury and Patrick Sullivan" (sic). I called and spoke with a representative at the "home office" in New Jersey. A pleasant and seemingly knowledgeable woman told me that the card was generated by the Florida sales office from which we had purchased a small investment property. She apologized for the mistake and felt that it was probably just a data base entry error. We talked for some time about this mistake and the possible unintended consequences. In the final analysis I believe it was just an entry error.

While it may seem that I acted like the somewhat paranoid 60's personality that I am, seeing my name listed on the mailing this way made me stop and ask some important questions. I immediately reviewed our purchase agreements and our deed to make sure everything was in order. The sales associate we worked with was great, but there were some aspects of the sale that required our personal scrutiny, not just because it made good business sense, but because we could not be at the closing and because we are a lesbian couple.

Our sales associate had told the agency's attorney that we wanted the property deed to list us as "Joint Tenants with Right of Survivorship (JTROS)." However, when I was faxed a draft deed we were designated as "Tenants in Common." The attorney decided to list us as "Tenants in Common" despite our sales associate's directions otherwise. When I called to ask that it be changed to "Joint Tenancy with Right to Survivorship" the legal assistant said to me, "That's a good idea. We always do that automatically for married couples."

As "Tenants in Common" each of us would have owned one half of the property. If one of us were to die, the other would only own one half interest in the property and the other half would belong to the deceased partner's estate. In other words, a third party could potentially inherit the half share, putting the surviving partner in the position of having to either sell their half or buy out the other half owner in order to own their own home. By simply changing our deed to "Joint Tenancy with Right of Survivorship," should one of us die, the other automatically owns all the property.

While the people we do business with may be well intentioned, competent and do not intend to discriminate, this was a stark reminder that legal matters reflect the structure of a non-gay nuclear family and are not inclusive of our best interests. It puts us on notice that the ultimate responsibility falls on us to be knowledgeable and take the necessary precautions to protect our families in legal matters.

PA Diversity Network will be presenting at the Unitarian Universalist Interweave Conference on May 7.  "What we're doing today is as old as the scripture: 'Love thy neighbor.' It's what Jesus said when he gave his sermon on the mount: 'Do unto others what you would have others do unto you.'"

QUOTE #2

"As for Marcavage, the self-styled street preacher from Lansdowne was hailed by some as a free-speech hero after his arrest for yelling Biblical warnings of doom at a gay street festival in Philadelphia. A judge finally threw out the case, noting that the Constitution protects all speech, even unpopular or offensive speech... It's a shame Marcavage didn't hear that lecture back in 1999, when he was a student at Temple University. Then he tried to get the university to shut down a play called "Corpus Christi," which portrays Jesus as gay. ..."I wanted to stop this twisted tale from reaching the stage ..those types of speech are not protected" under the First Amendment, Marcavage explained this week."

--From an Editorial in the Delaware County Daily Times, March 10, titled- Marcavage: Free speech - but only for

QUOTE #3

"That train [gay marriage] had already left the station. This was going to be used as a wedge issue regardless of whether or not some crazy mayor was sworn in in San Francisco or not. I can't stand my party right now. Is it political expediency? Is it accommodation that we're after? Or is it about standing up on principles and values?"
